Comments: In 2016, Benoît Pelard and his co-pilot Laurent Lajoie captured everyone's imagination by flying a route seldom taken in the America's Challenge, to Arizona. They hoped to fly over the Grand Canyon, and while they didn't get quite that far, had a great view of the Painted Desert and were warmly welcomed by members of the Navajo (Diné) nation when they landed on the reservation. In 2017 the team flew across the Midwest and enjoyed a great view of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway before landing east of Indianapolis. Benoît Pelard has been to Albuquerque and the Balloon Fiesta several times, beginning in 1989. He crewed for the French entry in the 2008 Gordon Bennett.

Benoît writes that the fascination of gas ballooning is "flying in silence, being suspended in midair underneath our small bubble of gas. Time seems to stop." He got hooked on ballooning in 1986, when the competitors in the French national hot air balloon championships stayed in his hotel.

Benoît Péterlé has competed internationally for several years, and while he's flown most of his races with Benoît Pelard, he had his best result in 2013 when the two Benoît's competed separately. He got his start in gas ballooning at the 2004 Gordon Bennett, held in his home town. During that race he crewed for Albuquerque's Richard Abruzzo and Carol Rymer Davis, who won the race that year, and still fondly remembers his encounters with Richard in 2004 and at the 2010 Gordon Bennett. Benoît enjoys "Flying with no worries about time, taking time for himself, watching earth from the sky."

Benoît and Benoît built their balloon, Marie Marvingt, themselves. They have flown it in nine Gordon Bennett races, and this year's America's Challenge will be its fourth flight in the United States.
